The Week's Work in Canada's Parliament

Prime Minister R. P. Bennett's reform for security programme was not intended to be popular with Big Business. But aside from little jibes here and there in more or less half-hearted manner, little has been said publicly until this week. The St. James Street press has hinted that it was not fair and so forth, but that was about all.

Then, off to Washington, D.C., Monday went Montreal's textile-brick-financier millionaire president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, A. O. Dawson, to address the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Arch-Tory Montreal Star's Washington correspondent demanded nearly two columns to tell Montrealers and Canadians just how peeved Mr. Dawson (and St. James Street?) was about the report of the Royal Commission on Price Spreads, got it from his editor.

Startling news of men and women getting $1.68 per week, and lower in some cases, working up to 70 hours per week, doesn't interest Mr. Dawson, apparently; he said of the system that has produced the above wages and thousands of other cases like it, as proven during the lengthy sitting of the price spreads House committee:

"I find it difficult to believe that Governmental bureaux can do any better job of organizing Canada's economic activities than all these citizens of every class, who have built up, through hard work and by trial and error, our competitive system of business."

Also, Mr. Dawson's remarks regarding the fundamental economic law of supply and demand is interesting in view of the fact that the royal commission found the element of competition practically non-existent due to the influence of combines in the leading industries of Canada (except agriculture). Here are Mr. Dawson's own words on this topic:

"What is more, we cannot permanently defy economic law. The fundamental truism of supply and demand, for example, must inevitably be recognized, and they who choose to ignore that simple economic fact will sooner or later be brought through suffering to see the futility of such defiance."

Major note of Mr. Dawson's speech to anti-New Deal members of the American Chamber of Commerce, however, was the warning that Canadian business must marshal its forces to fight government regulation as proposed in the report of the Royal Commission on Price Spreads.

What Mr. Dawson did not say was how he felt towards the thousands of workers throughout Canada who found themselves victims of what Mr. Bennett termed unfair practices made possible by disappearance of old conditions and economic laws. Further, it is quite obvious from his own words that he is much more interested in maintaining his position in the textile and brick business than in giving a fair living wage to his and other workmen, who constitute a large part of Canadian citizens.

Canada's Minister to Washington, Hon. W. D. Herridge, left Ottawa this week carrying secrets which many a Canadian would like to know, the basis upon which Canada is negotiating a reciprocal trade agreement with the United States.

Thousands of Canadians this week filled income tax returns. Less than five per cent of them, all at the high-income end of the list, will pay more than they did last year, as a result of the increased levies ordered this spring in Finance Minister Hon. E. N. Rholes' "poorman" budget.

LUXURIES ARE TAXED FAR LESS THAN FUEL

On the ladder of progress in Canada during the last 30 years, gasoline formerly an unwanted stepchild of crude oil, has blossomed out as one of the supporting struts. Its power has proved the motive force for the automobile industry. Without it, business generally would be hobbled. At the same time, it has proved a boon to governments and yet it has provided one of the strangest anomalies in the tax structure of Canada.

In the fiscal year of Canada, closing March 31, 1934, the excise tax collected on potable spirits manufactured in Canada, amounted to $6,331,031 and on tobacco, in the same period, $26,325,782.

These two products which, by no stretch of the imagination, can be included in the category of necessities, gave the federal government a total of $32,656,813.

Gasoline, however, admitted to be a necessity and part of the lifeblood stream which keeps industry alive in Canada, was responsible for adding $26,467,765 to the provincial government treasuries in 1933 thru the gasoline tax which in five years poured $111,386,439 into the coffers of the nine provincial governments.

EXPORT DAIRY CATTLE

Shipments to Great Britain Must Be Under Special Licence

All dairy cattle exported from Canada to Great Britain must, in future, be shipped under special licence issued by the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Only exporters and exporting agents shipping such cattle holding the special licence issued by the Department will be given export clearance subject to the following conditions:

That only such cattle will be exported that are approved at the port of embarkation as to type and condition by authorized representatives of the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. That only such cattle will be exported as comply with the requirements of the Animal's Contagious Disease Act and the regulations made thereunder, including, in addition to the certificate of tuberculin test which has been required since 1933, a certificate of blood test for Bang's disease (bovine infectious abortion).

A certificate of tuberculin test must be obtained from the District Veterinary Inspector in the province from which the shipment is made. If the cattle to be shipped have not been taken from a herd already under supervision a tuberculin test will be carried out by the Dominion Government Veterinary Inspector.

IMPROVING PASTURE LAND

In both eastern and western Canada extensive work is being carried out in connection with pasture and range land investigation. The Dominion Experimental Farms were among the first in Canada to realize the need of pasture improvement and to institute experiments to learn the best methods of pasture renovation. At present extensive pasture experiments are under way on seven of the experimental farms in eastern Canada, and much work is being done in regard to range land in the prairie provinces, the chief centre for this work being at Manyberries, Alberta. The significance of this work in western Canada may be realized from that fact that in certain parts of this range land area, 30 to 50 acres of land, or even more, are required for the annual maintenance of one mature animal, that there are two and a half million acres of land under grazing leases alone in the short grass range areas, and that such land constitutes the largest ranching area in Western Canada. In eastern Canada about seven million, two hundred and ninety-four thousand acres are devoted to pasture. Cultural and fertilizer treatments, pasture management schemes and problems connected with fencing and stock watering are all receiving close study, and much useful information is already available in regard to the improvement of pasture areas.

Milch cows in Canada increased in numbers from 3,659,200 head on December 1st, 1933, to 3,847,400 on December 1st, 1934, or 5.1 per cent.

The average value per acre of occupied farm land in the various provinces of Canada in 1934, including improved and unimproved land together with dwelling houses, barns and other farm buildings is reported as: P.E.I. $34; Nova Scotia $27; New Brunswick $24; Quebec $34; Ontario $41; Manitoba $17; Saskatchewan $16; Alberta $16; British Columbia $60.

The April number of The Mining and Engineering Record, published in Vancouver, contains a very interesting article on "Gold Quartz in Cariboo," written by Fred M. Wells. The author goes thoroughly into the question of the general present-day conditions with reference to the development of quartz prospects of which the district is full. For some years he has been interested in prospecting for gold quartz in the district and has visited and sampled many of the prospects. His opinion is that Cariboo is a rich field for development, but is too expensive for any ordinary prospector to do any great development on his prospect. The values are there but the claims are all to heavily timbered and carry so much surface waste that considerable money must be spent on development work before the value of the prospect can be determined. As prospectors, as a rule, cannot finance such a stiff proposition, Mr. Wells suggests the big mining companies stepping in and helping the prospector to develop his claim. Mr. Wells has placed rich samples of Cariboo quartz on display with the Vancouver Chamber of Mines.

DRILLING BEGINS

The airplane placer drill designed for use on the Antler Creek holdings of the Cariboo Placers, Inc., arrived in Barkerville early last week. A request was made for a tractor with which to break trail to the company property and the Department of Public Works responded immediately and promises to have a tractor on the ground at once. This will enable Maurice Anderson who is in charge of the development of the property to get the drill in and set up ready to start his first hole to bedrock in a very few days. Anderson is very enthusiastic about the possibilities of the Cariboo Placer ground and states that the arrival of the drill is just another step in bringing the old placer days of the Cariboo back once more. The preliminary prospecting work of the company which was carried on during the past season satisfied the directors that they were on the ancient channel of Antler Creek.
